Here are some of the changes already advocated by the Labor party in the British parliament:
The compulsory sale of land belonging to large estates and its division into smaller holdings.

An eight hour day for government employees, railway employees and miners.

Free meals for school children.

Adult suffrage for both sexes.

Laws to legalize "picketing" in strikes and lockouts.

Laws to relieve trades unions from all liability to be sued for their acts during strikes or lockouts.

Government contributions to workmen's insurance funds.

Unsectarian education.

Decentralization of government.

Home rule for Ireland.

Municipal gas supply, electric supply, trolley cars, municipal supplies of water, coal, bread and dairy products.

Trades union wages and hours in all public contracts.

The state to provide work for the unemployed.

Old age pensions.

Labor No Bar to Refinement.

I assert of every laboring man in this nation not only that he is to be a laborer, but that he has the means of securing, and ought to secure, such development that there should be refinement in his social affections, and I hope before I die to see pass away the thought that there is a presumption against a man's being refined because he is a laborer. There is nothing in labor inconsistent with refinement, with kindness, with affection with what ever belongs to the domestic circle, and there is no reason why a man that hews timber should not exercise all those sweet and gentle traits which have a dignifying and refining influence. Trees which bear blossoms are far more beautiful than those which do not.—Henry Ward Beecher.

A Daring Smuggler

(Original.)

When Captain General Tacon assumed the government of Cuba he found the revenue laws everywhere annulled. The smugglers were organized by one Marti, who was a sort of king among them. He was a tall, dark man, with Spanish, creole and mulatto blood in his veins, possessing great physical strength, courage, shrewdness and business tact.

The captain general endeavored to hunt down the smugglers, but they always eluded him. Then he offered a large reward to any one of them who would desert his comrades and pilot the government ships to their lairs. A double reward was offered for Marti, dead or alive. This plan also failed.

Either honor among thieves or a fear of punishment by their fellows prevented any betrayal. Four months passed and no one came forward to give the information and claim the reward.

One dark night two sentinels were pacing back and forth before the captain general's palace in Havana. The Plaza d'Armas, on which the palace stands, was deserted. Just before the clock struck 12 a tall figure wrapped in a military cloak stood watching the sentries from behind the statue of Ferdinand. They met at the entrance, then walked away from each other, turning again at the end of their beats.

The watcher was evidently waiting for an opportunity to dart between them when their backs were turned and just before they faced about. At last he put his design into practice and, with lightning speed, passed the portal.

Mounting the staircase, assuming the bearing of one who belonged there, he returned the salute of a sentinel standing near the captain general's door and entered. Tacon sat alone at a large table writing. He looked up at the intruder and asked sternly who he was that thus entered unannounced.

"One who has important information to impart to the government."

"How did you pass the guard?"

"That was not difficult."

"What is your business with me?"

"You have offered a reward for information concerning the smugglers."

"Ah! That is your business?"

"You have offered a pardon to him who will guide your ships to the smuggling hiding places."

"I have."

"And a special reward for the capture of their leader, Marti."

"Yes."

"I have come to give you the information you desire."

"Well, I am ready to hear it."

"First, have I your word that you will give me a free pardon?"

"I will."

"But my crimes in the eye of the law are great. Do you still promise?"

"If you perform your part, I will perform mine."

"Even if I am a leader among the contrabandists?"

"Yes," said Tacon after a moment's thought; "even if you are a leader."

"Excellent. I know that you are a man of honor. Had I not felt perfect confidence in your word I should not have ventured to thus come here."

"You can trust me."

"Well, then, I will not further delay. The man for whom you have offered the double reward is here."

"You are—"

"Captain Marti."

At the mention of this dreaded name Tacon cast his eyes upon a brace of pistols lying on his desk. Marti drew a pair of similar weapons and, stepping forward, laid them on the desk.

"I have no further use for these," he said.

"Very well," said the governor, "I will keep my word, but for the present you must remain under guard."

"I am willing, your excellency."

The next day a Spanish warship of light draft steamed out of the harbor. Marti was on board to pilot the government officers to the rendezvous of the smugglers. But the smugglers were already warned. Not one of them was captured. Nevertheless, the contrabandist organization was broken up, which was, after all, the main object.

Marti returned in the ship and was summoned before the governor, who said to him:

"Since you have performed your part of the agreement I will perform mine. Here is a pardon for all past offenses. And here is an order on the treasurer for—"

"The reward I do not claim," said the ex-smuggler, putting up his hand deprecatingly.

"What do you mean?" asked the astonished governor.

"I will make you a proposition. The treasury is poor, while I am rich. In place of the reward give me the exclusive right to fish on the coast of Cuba. I will at my own expense build a market which shall be a credit to the city of Havana and which at the end of twenty-five years shall revert to the government."

The governor took time to consider the proposition and finally accepted it. Marti at once entered upon the working of his privilege. Sending for the old associates, he employed them all, and they made more money under the law than they had made while coasting.

Lowly they had made while coasting, but they were taking great risks, besides being paid for any losses they sustained. While Marti was lending the government to their banks, Marti knew where the best fish were to be caught and supplied the city of Havana well and with great profit to himself. He built the market, as he had agreed, and at the expiration of twenty-five years it reverted to the government.

Marti, who grew very rich, obtained special theatrical privileges in Havana and built the Tacon theater.

ANTI-INJUNCTION LEAGUE.

The Striking Printers Urge Labor Unions to Organize.

A movement has been started by Typographical union No. 16 of Chicago to organize an anti-injunction league with the purpose of opening a general fight against the issuance of restraining court writs, known as government by injunction. The printers expect the 75,000 trades unionists in Chicago to join the organization and aim to get the American Federation of Labor to promote the movement and make it national in its scope. It was declared that over 50 per cent of the labor organizations in the country have been enjoined during strikes, and the movement will probably follow political lines so as to ally in action this large class of voters against the issuance of injunctions in labor complications.

For over ten years the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor has been urging congress to pass an anti-injunction law to prevent the conviction of those enjoined by the federal courts without a jury trial. No such relief has been forthcoming, and every year the courts have been issuing more stringent injunctions and punishing without mercy those who are claimed to have disobeyed them.

These federal judges are appointed by the president for life and are entirely independent of the appointing power and can only be removed by impeachment. It follows, therefore, that congress is the only power that can restrain these judges by passing laws to define their power to issue injunctions. Unfortunately these judges show by their acts that they favor the corporations and other employers in the disputes that arise in time of strikes, for it is doubtful if there ever has been an injunction issued by these courts to restrain the corporations, however despotic their action.

The election of a congress pledged to the measures organized labor desires is therefore the only relief that can be sought, and the nonpartisan plan of questioning the candidates of all parties and demanding their written reply and mailing all the voters of organized labor on those candidates only who pledge themselves for this legislation is the plan to assure success. This plan must also include the questioning of the candidates for the state legislature, for they have the election of United States senators.

THE BEST UNION MAN.

Rarely Is the Individual Who Makes the Most Noise.

It is not those who make the greatest noise in the world that accomplish the most for the union, says Shoe Workers' Journal. "An empty wagon rattles the loudest." People of great force and strong will are not forever asserting themselves. The one who silently resolves and watchfully waits is sure to conquer in the end. Bluster is not courage. Noise is not power, and a rude and domineering manner is no evidence of determination or force of character.

Many people make a mistake just here. They are so afraid that they will be considered weak that they adopt an abrupt, on the defensive air, which is very unpleasant. Gentleness is no bar to forcefulness. The man who has the most force in his home, in the community and in the union is usually the calm gentleman who silently works out his plans and patiently waits for them to develop.

Radical ranting may bring applause from the hotbeds, but no permanent progress is secured in that way. The cool, careful and accurate men are the ones who accomplish results.

What Unionism Is Doing.

The modern trades union is the champion and protector of childhood and womanhood. It is the trades union that is educating and fighting to rescue the child from the drudgery of factory life and place it in the school, just as the same agency is demanding an equal wage for men and women for equal work performed. It is the trades union that has abolished the sweatshop conditions existing in thousands of work-shops, thereby enabling thousands of women to receive better wages and improved conditions. It is the trades union that today saves thousands of young women from selling their honor on the street. The trades union is the greatest moral influence of the twentieth century, and it has done and is doing more to uplift the toiling masses than all other agencies combined.—Industrial Banner.
